Airport body scanners pass company's radiation tests

Controversial full-body X-ray scanners at U.S. airports underwent more than 700 inspections last year with all tests showing radiation levels below standards used by their manufacturer and the Transportation Security Administration, according to a review of the recently released reports. Singapore Changi Airport to test new body scanner

A new type of body scanner that addresses privacy concerns by producing generic stick-figure images instead of body contours will be tested at Changi Airport. This will be the third body-screening technology test at Changi. Two earlier trials in 2010 and 2008 ended with no further action taken. Police did not say why these were not continued, but said they would keep exploring new technology. Read more

IATA pushes single airport system in Philippines

The International Air Transport Association (IATA) is pushing for the continued improvement of the operations of the congested Ninoy Aquino International Airport (NAIA) and the establishment of an alternative gateway within the metropolis. Albert Tjoeng, IATA's assistant director of corporate communications for Asia Pacific, said the organization is supporting a single airport solution that is easily accessible from the city. Read more

US man shoots himself dead at airport security

A US man turned his gun on himself after being confronted by law officials at security at Houston's Bush International Airport. The man tried to get through security with a gun, and then killed himself when authorities tried to stop him. Read more

ISAF: Seven Nato soldiers killed in Afghan

A roadside bomb has killed seven Nato soldiers serving as part of the Nato force in southern Afghanistan's Kandahar province. The deaths came after three British troops were killed by a roadside bomb in southern Helmand province. Read more

Boston arrest prompts Homeland Security to verify all student visas

The Homeland Security Department has ordered US border agents, "effective immediately", to verify that every international student who arrives in the US has a valid student visa, according to an internal memorandum obtained by the Associated Press. The new procedure is the government's first security change directly related to the Boston Marathon bombings where one of the accused suspects, a friend of Tsarnaev, was able to re-enter US on expired visa because border agent did not have access to monitoring system. Read more

U.S. to keep Cuba on list of states sponsoring terrorism

The State Department said that the Obama administration will not remove Cuba from the list of states sponsoring terrorism. Other countries on the list include Iran, Syria, and Sudan. The list is updated annually. Cuba sheltered Colombian and Basque terrorists, but with peace negotiations in Colombia, and with the Basque separatists announcing the end of their armed struggle, some analysts thought Cuba would be removed from the list this year. Indonesia radicals urge 'Myanmar jihad' as bomb plot foiled

Two Indonesians have been detained over a plot to bomb the Myanmar embassy in Jakarta, officials said Friday, as radicals rallying in the city called for "jihad in Myanmar" to avenge Muslim deaths. The incidents highlight the growing anger in Muslim-majority Indonesia over a string of religious clashes in largely-Buddhist Myanmar, that have left many minority Muslims dead and tens of thousands displaced. Internet has extended battlefield in war on terror

The Internet has become crucial in the evolution of modern terrorism, experts say. Terrorism today is largely leaderless, executed by an informal network of disaffected misfits. Cloaked with a veil of anonymity, the discontent radicalize with the help of the Web's reassuring echo-chamber — hatred is stoked and jihad justified. The Boston Marathon bombing appears to be a pernicious reminder that the Internet has extended the battlefield in the war on terror. Read more

Facebook U-turn after charities criticize decapitation videos

Facebook has said it will delete videos of people being decapitated which had been spread on its site. "We will remove instances of these videos that are reported to us while we evaluate our policy and approach to this type of content," it said. The social network had previously refused to ban the clips. It had said people had a right to depict the "world in which we live". But the US's Family Online Safety Institute (Fosi) said the violent nature of the material had "crossed a line".
