Boston airport apologizes for 9/11 training drill

A training drill at Boston's Logan International Airport on an airport tarmac on the 12th anniversary of the September 11 attacks was swiftly criticized and led to an apology from airport officials. The airport announced on Facebook it would be running a drill that would include smoke on the airfield at about 10 a.m. People quickly reacted to the post and were outraged that the airport would conduct a drill on Sept. 11. ### Bomb-detecting lasers could be next for carry-on luggage

Your carry-on luggage and electronics are already intimately familiar with airport X-ray machines. But just when you thought wait times couldn't get any longer, they may one day be subjected to another check: bomb-detecting lasers. Researchers at Michigan State University have developed a low-energy laser that can pick up minute amounts of chemical explosives on luggage and clothing. Read more

Industry analyst: 9/11 hastened but didn't cause airlines' woes

To Victor Latimer, the events of Sept. 11, 2001, play out in black and white. The owner of a skycap service at Tulsa International Airport, he remembers showing up and looking at unaware passengers as their planes were diverted. Flight attendants were visibly shaken, he said, because they worried about their friends as details of the terrorist attacks played out and airlines scrambled to find a handful of unaccounted for planes.
