Israel tightens aviation security as hijacking suspected in Malaysia flight disappearance

As the disappearance of Malaysia Airlines flight 370 continues to baffle investigators and aviation experts, Israel is tightening security standards for any flights that enter its aerial territory. With the strong suspicions the plane was hijacked, Israeli security and aviation officials held meetings and produced a series of evaluations in the past several days. One of the conclusions they reached is that foreign airlines approaching Israeli airspace must identify themselves far earlier than was standard.

Taiwan Interior Minister inspects airport security

Following the disappearance of a Malaysia Airlines plane, inspection measures at Taiwan Taoyuan International Airport must be raised to the highest level, Minister of the Interior Chen Wei-jeen said yesterday during an inspection of the airport. Apart from providing quality service, all security inspection operations at the airport must be raised to "the standard of counter-terrorist operations in countries such as the US and Israel," he said.

In-depth Analysis: Attack on Serena Hotel Kabul

Four gunmen passed through heavy security at the Serena Hotel in the capital Kabul on Thursday evening, opening fire on guests and staff and killing nine civilians, including four foreigners. Among the dead were an Afghan journalist from the Agence France Presse agency who was shot dead along with his wife and two children who were celebrating the Persian New Year and a former Paraguayan diplomat who had come to Afghanistan to observe next month's elections. The wounded also included a member of Afghanistan's Parliament, Habib Gul Afghan. All four gunmen were killed. The Serena has been targeted before, most notably in 2008 when gunmen killed six people in an attack focused on the hotel gym.

TSA confiscates perfume bottle shaped like grenade

One woman is making a stink after the Transportation Security Administration confiscated her expensive bottle of designer perfume at the airport because agents said it looked like a grenade.

Country music promoter and frequent traveler Lois Lewis was stopped by TSA agents and investigated by a bomb expert at Phoenix's Sky Harbor after trying to bring her 2-ounce bottle of Jimmy Choo perfume in her carryon.

Amanda Seyfried Accidentally Carries Knife On Plane, Alerts TSA

Amanda Seyfried boarded a plane on Friday, March 14, with a knife in her pocket. Security didn't catch on to it and the actress didn't realize it until she sat in her seat.

The 28-year-old then tweeted TSA with a message so these scary situations won't repeat themselves (hopefully).

FBI: Jet passenger tried to fly with false name

A Delta Air Lines passenger is accused of flying from Atlanta to Birmingham in one person's name, then obtaining boarding passes in someone else's name for two more flights on United Airlines. Robert Quran Hick also is accused of twice trying to enter a secured area of Birmingham-Shuttlesworth International Airport by going up a downward escalator after arriving on the flight from Atlanta on Sunday. Hick was able to get a United Airlines representative at the Alabama airport to book him on two other flights with that airline to Chicago and Colorado Springs, FBI Special Agent Adam Hutzell wrote in a sworn affidavit.

Ultraviolet Explosive Detector For Better Airport Screening

Scientists at the University of Florida in Gainesville have developed a new detection system that could improve safety in airports and on flights without extra security lines. The detection system is the first to use ultraviolet light to identify traces of dangerous explosives like TNT. All bags that undergo TSA screening currently go through a standard X-ray conveyor belt. Currently, security agents then perform additional screening on about 5 percent of bags. This additional step adds time on security lines for those selected for additional screening, but subjects only a small percentage of bags to additional scrutiny. The new technology works with the existing X-ray conveyor belt, and is able to scan 100 percent of the luggage for explosives without the extra step of removing them for further inspection.

Pallet, belts spotted in Indian Ocean hunt for MH370

Australian officials said today that a wooden cargo pallet along with belts or straps have been spotted in the remote Indian Ocean by one of the aircraft deployed in the hunt for a missing Malaysian jet. The objects were seen by a civilian aircraft assisting in the search for Malaysia Airlines MH370 yesterday in what the Australian Maritime Safety Authority confirmed was the "first visual sighting in the search so far".

Serious gaps in aviation security, say experts

Security experts indicated that the disappearance of Malaysia Airlines Flight MH370 has exposed serious security gaps and loopholes in the international aviation system that must be plugged. A big question, they said, is whether Malaysia alerted its neighbours when the jetliner vanished so that they could take precautions to protect themselves.
