OAP in airport 'bomb parts' arrest

A 71-year-old man on his way to Los Angeles has been detained after parts of a potential explosive device were found in his carry-on luggage at Montreal's Trudeau International Airport. The package was spotted at a security checkpoint in the US departures area early yesterday, said a montreal police spokesman. Read more

Acoustic Remote Bomb Detection

A number of different tools are currently used for explosives detection. These range from dogs and honeybees to mass spectrometry, gas chromatography, and specially designed X-ray machines. A new acoustic detection system, consisting of a phased acoustic array that focuses an intense sonic beam at a suspected improvised explosive device, can determine the difference between those that contain low-yield and high-yield explosives. How Secure Is The Information You Store On The Cloud

A recent revelation from a cloud storage site highlighted the vulnerability of information in the ether. Security experts recommend that particularly sensitive files be encrypted or encapsulated to prevent unauthorized access to the information, but even encryption and encapsulation aren't always enough to protect information on the cloud. Freeze US-EU pact aimed at tracking terrorism funds, advises Strasbourg

The European parliament on Tuesday demanded a financial transactions information-sharing pact between the EU and the US aimed at tracking terrorism funding be frozen because of the US National Security Agency's mass surveillance operations. The three-year-old agreement, known as Swift, had to be suspended because of suspicions that the NSA was using the arrangements to pry into Europeans' bank and financial dealings, the parliament said in a resolution. Iran may be month from a bomb

Iran could produce enough weapons-grade uranium to build a nuclear bomb in as little as a month, according to a new estimate by one of the USA's top nuclear experts. The new assessment comes as the White House invited Senate staffers to a briefing on negotiations with Iran as it is trying to persuade Congress not to go ahead with a bill to stiffen sanctions against Iran. Armed police lock down court precinct after bomb scare

A man is assisting police with their inquiries into an incident outside the Courts complex on George Street, Brisbane City. There were reports that a man was acting suspiciously nearby. A section of Roma Street is currently closed to traffic and pedestrians between Herschel and Ann Streets while specialist police conduct investigations. Unconfirmed reports suggested a heavily tattooed man threw something underneath a police car, sparking the lockdown. Read more

Terrorism insurance should cover cyberterrorism: industry

The Terrorism Risk Insurance Act(TRIA) is a federal backstop designed to protect insurers in the event an act of terrorism results in losses above $100 million. Industry officials question whether cyber terrorism is covered by the program, which is administered by the Treasury Department.

Industry insiders note that terrorism risks have evolved since TRIA was enacted and cyberterrorism is now a real threat. TRIA should thus not simply be reauthorized with a blanket stamp of approval; instead there should be a discussion about whether acts of cyberterrorism should be explicitly included in TRIA.
