Three arrested over Hong Kong's 'largest-ever' bomb plot on eve of major anti-government protest

Hong Kong police have detained three men after seizing what is being billed as the largest amount of the deadliest explosives ever uncovered in the city, along with pro-independence materials, from a home-made laboratory in a Tsuen Wan industrial building on the eve of another major anti-government march. Controlled explosions were conducted on site at the Lung Shing Factory Building on Texaco Road on Saturday as the police bomb squad disposed of some of the extremely powerful and highly unstable explosives.

Senior superintendent Steve Li Kwai-wah of the Organised Crime and Triad Bureau said investigators were looking into the background of a 27-year-old man who was arrested in connection with the case to determine if it was related to the mass protest planned for Sunday, which has already sparked concerns about potential chaos because of a dispute over the route and duration of the march. Two men, both aged 25, were also arrested on Saturday night in connection with the find, one in Tsuen Wan and the other in Sheung Shui.

US airport security discover 'souvenir' missile launcher in passenger's checked luggage

A man has been stopped by airport security in the US because he had a missile launcher in his luggage. The traveller had placed the military grade weapon in his checked baggage when flying from Kuwait to Baltimore/Washington Thurgood Marshall Airport in Maryland. The passenger told airport staff he wanted to keep the missile launcher as a "souvenir". Security staff contacted airport police who detained the man for questioning. He told them he was a military worker and was coming home from Kuwait. The weapon was turned over to the state fire marshal for safe disposal, officials said.

El Paso shooting: At least 20 dead as gunman opens fire in Texas Walmart

A gunman armed with an AK-47-style assault rifle opened fire on victims as young as four months old in Cielo Vista mall at around 10am local time. Most were shot in a Walmart store within the shopping complex before the shooter was detained at the scene, police said. US media outlets named Patrick Crusius, 21, from Allen in Dallas, Texas, as the suspect. A CCTV image showing a man walking into the mall brandishing an assault rifle was released by police. He was wearing a dark T-shirt and ear protectors. Texas, Gov. Greg Abbott said "20 innocent people from El Paso have lost their lives and more than two dozen more are injured". "We as a state unite in support of the victims and their family members. We want to do all we can to assist them," he said.

29 killed in two US mass shootings within hours

A lone shooter killed nine people in Dayton, Ohio early Sunday before being shot dead by responding police officers. "We have nine victims deceased... and we have approximately 16 more victims hospitalized right now in unknown conditions," Dayton Police Lieutenant Colonel Matt Carper said. The attacker opened fire around 1:00 am Sunday (0500 GMT) on a street in the popular bar and nightlife Oregon district. Police were working to identify the shooter and the FBI were on the scene. "Fortunately we had multiple officers in the immediate vicinity when this incident started so there was a very short timeline of violence, for that we're very fortunate," he said, praising the swift response by officers.

Buttigieg: America 'Under Attack From Homegrown White Nationalist Terrorists'

South Bend, Indiana, Mayor Pete Buttigieg expressed concerns Saturday that the U.S. is "under attack" by white nationalists carrying out mass shootings — and those white nationalists have been encouraged by President Donald Trump. Buttigieg was one of 19 Democratic presidential candidates speaking at a forum in Las Vegas sponsored by the public-sector labor union AFSCME. During the event, co-moderated by HuffPost's Amanda Terkel and The Nevada Independent's Jon Ralston, news broke of a mass shooting in El Paso, Texas, in which at least 20 people were killed and 26 others injured. Unconfirmed reports indicated the suspected shooter, a 21-year-old from the Dallas area, posted a manifesto to the 8chan message board hours before the shooting, in which he allegedly professed his white nationalist ideology and his belief that Texas is under "Hispanic invasion." Law enforcement officials said they are aware of the document but have yet to confirm the shooter did, in fact, write it.

Loose Bat Terrorizes Spirit Airlines Passengers Mid-Flight

Well, here's something scarier than Spirit Airlines' arbitrary fees. Passengers aboard one of the budget airline's flights from North Carolina to New Jersey were spooked Wednesday morning when a bat randomly began flying around the cabin. Peter Scattini, a 23-year-old passenger on the 6 a.m. flight from Charlotte to Newark, posted a video of the incident on Twitter that'll make some want to clutch their emotional support animals. Passengers to stack items on top of one another and obstruct X-ray images.

Bombs rattle Bangkok during ASEAN summit; two suspects held

Two men from Thailand's insurgency-hit south have been arrested and linked to several small bombs which rattled Bangkok Friday as it hosted a regional summit attended by US Secretary of State Mike Pompeo, leaving four people wounded but not disrupting the diplomatic event. Thailand, which has a grim history of political violence and is fighting a long-running rebellion in the Muslim-majority south, remains deeply divided after a controversial March election returned a junta to power as a civilian government. Prime Minister Prayut Chan-O-Cha, who led the former junta, told reporters "there were nine successful or attempted explosions... we haven't ruled out any motives."
