Explosive Testimony From Inside US Jihadi Cult

The Clarion Intelligence Network has obtained an explosive testimony from a former member of Jammāt ul-Fuqra—now known as Muslims of the Americas (MOA)—an Islamist apocalyptic cult that claims to have 22 “Islamic villages” in the U.S. including its 70-acre “Islamberg” headquarters in upstate New York. This member even went on a MOA trip to Pakistan to meet with their radical cleric, Sheikh Mubarak Ali Gilani, and join with other terrorist groups for training arranged by the Pakistani government’s intelligence agency (ISI). The testimony gives an unprecedented look inside the MOA cult and how terrorists groups backed by Pakistan are overseen and coordinated by the ISI intelligence service.

Future guide dogs get TSA checkpoint training at BWI to practice when they go on flights

Future guide dogs had an opportunity to practice going through a TSA checkpoint Monday night so that they would be more familiar with the checkpoint screening process when they do need to catch a flight. TSA officials at Baltimore-Washington International Thurgood Marshall Airport screened 27 puppies and their trainers from the Guiding Eyes for the Blind’s puppy raising regions of Maryland, as they came through the checkpoint in an effort to acclimate the future guide dogs with an important piece of the airport experience.

Islamic State fighters heading home: Is Southeast Asia ready?

Roughly 1,000 Southeast Asians joined the conflict in Iraq and Syria. With the terrorist group’s military collapse, Insight examines whether they will rise again in their home countries. The Islamic State was officially declared defeated in Syria in March, following years of military pressure from a 79-member coalition. That the region is emerging as a terrorism hotspot is evidenced in the rise of terror attacks in several countries, including Indonesia, the Philippines and also Sri Lanka.

2 Singaporeans detained under ISA for intending to join Islamic State in Syria

Two Singaporeans have been detained under the Internal Security Act (ISA) for intending to travel to Syria to join the Islamic State (IS) militant group, the Ministry of Home Affairs (MHA) said on Thursday (Jul 25). In a press release, the ministry said that the first case involved 36-year-old licensed money changer Kuthubdeen Haja Najumudeen, who had been a follower of Sri Lankan radical preacher Zahran Hashim. Haja was arrested in May this year. The second case involved Suderman Samikin, a 47-year-old former delivery assistant, who was arrested in July. Suderman was radicalised after encountering lectures by Anwar al-Awlaki, an “Al-Qaeda ideologue” who is now dead.

ISIS Kids, Women Raise Flag of Terror Group at Syrian Camp

Footage is being circulated among ISIS Telegram channels showing children and women held in northern Syria's al-Hol refugee camp hoisting a makeshift ISIS flag and women separately vowing vengeance in the name of the terror group. More than 75,000 people are housed at the internally displaced persons camp run by the Syrian Democratic Forces, including thousands of ISIS wives and children. Last month, about 800 ISIS family members were released from the camp after Kurdish officials determined they were not a security risk.

Internal TSA Memo Calls for Changes to Airport Food Truck Screening Process

The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) told its inspectors this week that changes need to be made to the food truck screening process at airports following Fox News' exposure of a security gap at the nation's largest transport hubs. TSA documents obtained by Fox News last week showed that food catering trucks were allowed to pass through airport gates without facing proper security screenings. The investigation revealed that airlines pay private contractors and trust them to stop explosives from ending up in catering carts.

Aviation Security Questioned as Stowaway Falls from Landing Gear into Garden

There have been calls for fresh scrutiny of aviation security as efforts continue to identify a man whose frozen body fell into a garden in London from the landing gear of a Kenya Airways plane. Investigations have centred on Nairobi airport, where the man is believed to have concealed himself in the aircraft, but one aviation expert suggested airlines and plane manufacturers could take steps including fitting heat sensors to detect stowaways. A bag, water and some food were discovered in the landing gear compartment after the flight arrived at London Heathrow on June 30. The man's body was found in a garden in Clapham, south London, shortly before 3.40pm that day.

LAX Unveils New Germ-Fighting Bins At TSA Security Checkpoints

Germaphobes rejoice! Los Angeles International Airport is rolling out new bins at security screening lines designed to deter bacteria buildup. "This is another small sign of the way that we are working to improve the passenger's experience," said airport spokesman Heath Montgomery. "We are looking at all of the details, all the way down to what you're putting your stuff into at the security checkpoints." And while bin bacteria hasn't been a huge concern at LAX, Montgomery says the new containers will help improve airport cleanliness and lessen fears of contracting diseases, especially with thousands of people handling the bins each day. The bins are made of materials that slow down bacterial growth, and even though they're the same size as the previous ones, their slim and shallow design will make it harder for passengers to stack items on top of one another and obstruct X-ray images.
