Sydney Airport Baggage Handlers Among Five Men Charged Over Alleged Cocaine Importation

Two Qantas baggage handlers have been charged with cocaine smuggling while working at Sydney Airport. Darren Bragg and Michael McPherson and three other men were arrested in connection to the alleged importation on Saturday of about 100 kilograms of cocaine that was stored in a plane's cargo bay. The Australian Federal Police (AFP) allege Bragg, 61, from Coogee, and McPherson, 55, from Mascot, used their access as baggage handlers to move five large bags of cocaine from a container in a cargo hold of a plane that arrived from South Africa on Saturday.

Helsinki Airport Security Checks Disrupted Due To JHL Walkout Protest

Travelers passing through Helsinki Airport on Thursday, October 5, should brace for potential delays as the Trade Union for the Public and Welfare Sectors (JHL) plans a walkout from 1:30 to 2:00 pm. The demonstration, aimed at opposing what the union deems "unreasonable misery" imposed on the workforce by the government's policies, is expected to impact security checks for half an hour. JHL President Päivi Niemi-Laine explained that the walkout was a response to the government's plans to introduce employment reforms that could make it easier to terminate contracts and increase the prevalence of fixed-term employment relationships. Niemi-Laine condemned what she referred to as the "constant humiliation of employees" and criticized the government for not heeding the demands of the workforce.

Traffic Resumes At Germany's Hamburg Airport After Iran Plane Threat

Air traffic has resumed at Germany's Hamburg airport, a spokesperson told Reuters on Monday, after a police operation in response to a threat against a plane from Tehran prompted all landings and take-offs to be halted. A federal police spokesperson earlier said officers, acting on a threat of an attack sent via email, searched a plane with 198 passengers from Tehran that had landed in the northern German city. The German air force said on its X social media account that it escorted the plane after it entered German airspace east of Berlin due to a bomb threat. Police interviewed passengers, which is normal procedure when a threat is classified as serious, the police spokesperson told Reuters. No takeoffs or landings were possible because the airport fire brigade was involved with the search, the spokesperson added.

A Major Disturbance Was Caused On A Flight Bound For Heraklion When Two Female Passengers Who Got Drunk And Created Huge Problems

According to Creta Post, the incident happened yesterday late afternoon on the Manchester - Heraklion flight. Among the passengers was a 55-year-old Irish woman with her 24-year-old daughter, who also had a baby (about 1.5 years old). The two women were drunk, and they cursed and spat at the crew during the whole flight. They caused huge problems, and one hit a passenger at one point. The pilot informed the airport of Heraklion about the situation, as a result of which the police were mobilised. As soon as the plane landed at "Nikos Kazantzakis" and the two women with the baby disembarked, the 24-year-old took her baby in sight of the policemen and ran down the runway, while as soon as the policeman stopped her, she bit him! Finally, both were arrested and taken to the police station, while a case file was filed against them for bodily harm for obstructing traffic. The 24-year-old is also charged with exposing a minor to danger.

Airports Prepare For New Scanning Tech That Will End 100ml Liquid Rule

AIRPORT security culture in the north is set for its biggest shake up in decades from next June. New mandated 3D scanning technology will mean passengers being able to leave liquids and electrical devices in their in-flight bags for security checks. It spells the end of the dreaded 100ml bottle in a clear bag rule, and will mean passengers handling fewer trays for their belongings. The stringent rules around airport security were introduced in 2006 following a foiled terror plot to blow up planes flying from London to the US with homemade liquid bombs. Belfast International Airport managing director Graham Keddie confirmed the airport is on course to meet the UK's government's June 2024 deadline to install the new technology. The CT scanners offer more detailed images of what is inside bags. It's expected to substantially speed up security checks at all airports, which are often held up by passengers failing to adhere to the rules. But it has come at a major cost for Belfast International. Aside from the £6 million purchase cost for the six new 3D scanners it will install, the scale and weight of the machines has necessitated the construction of a whole new building to house them in. The total cost of the project is expected to be in the region of £25m.
